The Golf House at Atlantic Fields is a Discovery Land amenity building set inside one of the most exclusive new private clubs in Florida. The design is simple and severe: a low, wide structure that opens the entire length of one elevation onto the course.

ACG installed the full glass-wall package that makes that gesture work. Oversized lift-and-slide door sets run the length of the course-side elevation. When retracted, the building has no wall between the interior lounge and the first tee. Impact storefront frames the balance of the envelope, and the finished clubhouse reads as architecture, not as a box with windows cut into it.

The install was coordinated with Discovery Land's finish standards — fittings, thresholds, and reveals all specified to the same tolerance as millwork. The result is the amenity building the club uses on every marketing tour.
